Hundred Meetings

Editor's Comments

This booklet is a summary of 1st and 2nd year 'Points and Collaterals' course in the Hebrew University's Ancient Chinese Medicine Program. The collaterals presented were compiled by the course's staff from various sources, as well as a number of Peter Van Kerevl's additions according to his own personal interpretations. The vast majority of material consolidated in this booklet may be found freely in various scripts and writings<sup>1</sup>.

The booklet is aimed to be an illustration and study-aid, therefore layouts and color schemes were made to be as constant as possible. One should keep in mind that some simplifications were made in order to clarify understanding (e.g., the mentioning of a specific point instead of an anatomical area, or the exclusion of points which do not have meetings in the 'Point Overview' section).

It should be noted that the following collaterals are the program's choice of teaching; they are not intended to belittle different interpretations from different texts. Contradictions most probably exist, there is no one ultimate truth.

The following contents may be freely distributed. The diagrams are schematic, require prior teaching in order to be fully understood and should not be used as a clinical foundation; use in such a way is at the user's sole responsibility.

Clarifications

Throughout the text certain terms have been used which might not be familiar to all, therefore it seems fit to point out a few terms.

Jing Mai (Jīngmài 經脈)	The main meridian, including superficial and internal path ways. Occasionally these have numerous branches some of which enter internal organs, in which cases they are called Organ IB (Internal Branch).
DIV (Bié 別)	The Divergent collaterals.
LUO (Luò 絡)	The Luo Connecting collaterals.
TMM (Jīn 筋)	Tendo-muscular meridians, also referred to as sinew channel.
Points to influence Layer	If a page contains this comment in the index, it is meant that in order to stimulate the use of a certain collateral only these specific points upon the pathway will do so. For example, to make use of the Zu Yang Ming DIV, one would have to use one or more of the following points: ST-30, ST-9, ST-1, BL-1.
